Summary

About the role:

#LI-Hybrid

The Associate Director (AD) oversees three mission-critical areas for Translational Clinical Oncology (TCO) Communications: translates Global Head and leadership team executive presence, image and narrative while combining pipeline and scientific storytelling. Leads the mining of Research Development Commercial (RDC) key information paired to pipeline assets across TCO Disease Areas, working with colleagues at all levels to position them favorably internally. The Associate Director (AD) also plays a key role in external storytelling about TCO science, engaging Key Opinion Leaders (KOL) and external community.

About the Role

Key responsibilities:

- How do we tell the story? Create the strategy for how we communicate with our associates using current and new channels in ways that have the biggest impact
- Who participates in telling the story? Work closely with the TCO Global Head and Strategy & Operations (S&O) Head to have insight into key stakeholders to make sure their voice is amplified and/or aligned on the best possible channels
- How should the story be experienced by associates? Create a segmented audience strategy and corresponding channel mix that reaches employees in the ways they respond to most
- Regularly measure impact of content and channels and make results-based recommendations for future areas of focus
- Point of contact for end-to-end project management and tactical execution, including managing multiple media formats across various distribution channels, (e.g. intranet content and broad audience e-mail messages, etc.), executing when needed and arranging delegate coverage when required
- Play a leading role in pulling together the right stakeholders (e.g. S&O, Disease Area Leadership (DAL) / Platform Development, People & Organization (P&O) to solve common communication challenges and partner for increased employee engagement and scientific storytelling
- Collaborate and maintain relationships with key stakeholders to ensure influence across the Novartis communications community and consistency in all communications. Ensure campaigns are aligned to the Novartis brand and fully consistent with the evolving legal, regulatory and compliance environment
- Executive communications, responsible for strategic direction of TCO Global Head image, presence and narrative. Executive partnership with S&O leadership members
- Internal and External communications, serves as point-of-contact for scientific and early-stage pipeline updates for TCO. Works with colleagues throughout RDC to ensure pipeline progress, priorities and strategy are articulated across communications
